People The most common type of photography is street and candid. Like motion pictures, photographers use a lens that captures light to project an image onto the sensor. The size of the sensor is determined by the focal length of the lens (you can see this in the discussion of focal length in the upcoming "Focal length: Getting the Right Angle" sidebar), and the distance between the camera and the subject is called the "camera-to-subject" or "focal length" distance. The focal length measures how much a lens magnifies the scene that it sees. The focal length of the lens is measured in millimeters. A lens with a long focal length is known as a telephoto lens; a lens with a

If your Photoshop window starts taking up a lot of your computer's resources, it may be that you have an older version of Photoshop that's slowing down your system. You can update your version of Photoshop by visiting the Adobe website at www.adobe.com/photoshop/updates/. Creating CSS Effects Adding effects to your web page is a lot like fiddling with a CD: You can add new tracks, or erase them. And while most web browsers play the original musical track, they'll skip to the new one you add. Adding a new track is as easy as adding a new property to your web page's CSS (Cascading Style Sheets). CSS allows you to adjust the look and feel of your web page by providing instructions for a web browser. CSS is a different type of file than HTML, XHTML, or any other type of web page. Choosing a web browser can be a very difficult task, even if you follow the advice in the sidebar "Selecting the right web browser." Fortunately, you don't have to worry too much about this if all you're interested in is adding effects to your web page. However, if you ever want to design a printed page, you'll have to carefully test every browser to ensure that your CSS (and its effects) display correctly. One of the most common effects you can add to your web page is a drop shadow, which gives your page a 3-D effect. (Check out the box below for additional drop-shadow-related info.) To add a drop shadow to your page, follow these steps: 1. Open the CSS file you created earlier in this chapter. 2. Add the following lines at the very end of the file (note that the line breaks and blank lines have been included for clarity): background-image: -webkit-gradient(linear, 0 0, 0 100%, from(#009), to(#f00)); background-image: -moz-linear-gradient(#009 0%, #f00 100%); background-image: -ms-linear-gradient(#009 0%, #f00 100%); background-image: -o-linear-gradient(#009 0%, #f00 100%); background-image: linear-gradient(#009 0%, #f00 100%); background-position: left top; background-repeat: no-repeat

What's New in the Download Photoshop Mobile?

6 dollars a week is a big chunk of change for me but when I put in my part time job I have to save at least $300-$400/ week (depending on the situation) as a student to actually save up for the surgery. It's not that I don't have the money to pay for it; I just need to make conscious decisions about what to buy and what not to buy. I do tend to buy what I need, but not when I need it. Besides, there are new threads everywhere on here all the time and I can go check them out anytime. I don't really have any money for expensive stuff. Mostly because my life is hectic, but I feel that if I spend a lot of money, I need to be prepared to pay more for it later. So spending a few bucks on a simple pair of pants probably would be fine. While I would like to have lots of things, I don't want to carry debt. I was always taught that you pay your bills on time, so that you can avoid the penalty of late fees. Plus, having all your money tied up in credit cards that accrue interest means you can't just spend $1 on something and feel like you'll be able to get it back. 6 dollars a week is a big chunk of change for me but when I put in my part time job I have to save at least $300-$400/ week (depending on the situation) as a student to actually save up for the surgery.
